Helping you manage risk more effectively with corporate families data

- Boost confidence that you are meeting the latest regulatory requirements using a complete picture of your holdings
- Easily identify potential conflicts of interest in client relationships, holdings and potential holdings
- Correlate reference data between the entity and its issued securities
- Proactively analyze the risk impact of new positions, pre-trade and post-trade
- Quickly build in-depth, accurate customer profiles, including legal name, address, industry, revenue and corporate hierarchies

Here are a few more ways that our corporate family intelligence can make your job easier:

Business Development

It's not always easy to see how companies are connected. Subsidiaries may have names that are unrelated to their corporate parents. Our corporate hierarchies help you quickly identify connections—so you can avoid cultivating new business or alliances that conflict with the interests of your current clients. Concerned about the global business climate? You can use Corporate Affiliations to find U.S. parent companies with operations in other countries, allowing you to develop a more complete picture of risk potential. As an added benefit, your prospects and clients can confidently partner with you, knowing that you have a strategy for conducting due diligence in place.

Credit & Purchasing

Does the subsidiary you deal with have a parent that's under financial stress? Our corporate families data can help you evaluate risk before extending credit to a new customer or increasing a line of credit to a current client. You can also view current and history company profiles, including financial data, side-by-side—allowing you to identify trends that could increase your risk exposure when you select a vendor.

Corporate Governance & Legal

Ensuring that your organization is meeting the latest corporate governance requirements can be a challenge. Corporate Affiliations can help you reduce your exposure by providing you with a better understanding of how securities link to legal corporate hierarchies. Our business intelligence allows you to efficiently uncover a more complete picture of your portfolio, market exposure and potential conflicts of interest, helping you meet stakeholder expectations and safeguarding your organization's long-term success.

Could M&A activity put your organization at risk?

Corporate Affiliations knows that mergers and acquisitions have the potential to elevate an organization's exposure to risk. If an important client, partner or vendor is in the midst of a merger, you need to stay on top of M&A activity—from the announcement to closure. That's where our exclusive MergerTrak™ process and dedicated M&A group make the difference. We are the only M&A content provider that flags the target and acquiring companies and then alerts customers when the post-merger reconciliation is complete.

What can you learn from executive moves?

Corporate Affiliations also helps you monitor executive moves, which can be a bellwether for risk. With our Executive Alerts feature, you simply identify the companies you want to target; then you receive an email alert any time executive moves occur within that organization. Knowing when key personnel are leaving a company can help you make more insightful business decisions that minimize your risk exposure.
